Description

Interesting bronze from the early twentieth century of a nude nymph riding a goat and standing before her between her thighs a hilarious young satyr. this mythological bronze continues the theme of Bacchanalia, the Bacchus cult and relations between nymphs, maenads and satyrs. this particular bronze with a beautiful patina takes these themes in a playful and fun, the characters are happy and innuendo can be awarded. work probably from the early twentieth century or the late nineteenth, repeating themes we find the Archaeological Museum of Naples.
