Description

The work illustrates an episode from the Book of Exodus: Moses, after fleeing Egypt, reaches a well in the territory of Midian. There, he intervenes to defend the seven daughters of Jethro (the priest of Midian) from the local shepherds who were preventing them from watering their flock. In the painting, Moses, with a decisive gesture, helps the young women and allows their sheep to drink from the well.

French School, 18th century. First half of the 18th century.

Dimensions: W 140 x 110 cm with frame /
Canvas: 127 x 98 cm

The painting was relined in the early 1900s.
