Description

I redid the photos because the previous ones were too bad, but these are not much better and they render only a tiny part of the quality of the works. Antonio Uria Monzon (1929-1996), a Spanish artist who was first exiled in Paris and then alternated with Ciboure and Agen (his wife's hometown), developed a very personal universe, nourished by reshaped and perfectly assimilated influences such as Goya and Picasso. If a part of his work consisted of making hyperrealistic portraits, especially of children, a whole part is devoted to his other passion: bullfighting, mainly focused on the movement masterfully rendered in watercolor or oil. Here we have another facet of his work, a kind of poetic surrealism that he developed in parallel with the 60s at his death. This "Young girl with bouquet and dove" and
