acanthus foliage, their spindles intricately decorated with godrons andgrained myrtle leaves in a frieze crowning a corolla with motifs oflanceolate and acanthus leaves. These unfold symmetrically oneither side of a tapered shaft with dark fluting in the form of fine asparagus shoots and discreetbell-shaped ends, taking the elegant form of a quiverfilled with feathered arrows--one of the major attributes of Cupid, the godwho presides over romantic love. Note: one flute is missing. Similarfoliage motifs (acanthus buds and leaves,lanceolate leaves) adorn the base and the stem of the lighting fixture,which sits on a circular marble-like base with molded, rounded edgesembellished with a string of pearls and running along its circumference, withina rectangular panel, is a charming floral garland finelychiseled with rosebuds.Fourflattened-ball feet complete the sober, balanced silhouette of thesecandelabras in an elegant Neo-Louis XVI style--feminine in appearance given theirshape, the ornamental repertoire adopted, and the sentimental symbolism (leavesof myrtle, roses, and quivers) associated with them.As such,this charming pair of candelabras will bring a subtle andtender decorative touch to any interior.Materials: gilded bronze; white marble.Dimensions: H: 24 cm; W: 20 cm.Parisian work in the Louis XVI style from the last thirdof the 19th century, 1880-1890Good overall condition.
