Description

This kilim, which originates from Mut in southeastern Anatolia, instantly captivates with the harmony that emanates from its colors, design, and contrasts. It features a subtle palette of brick red and dusty pink, coral, ivory, very dark brown, and muted shades of green-gray. Across nearly its entire surface, delicate abrash create variations in the tones of a single color and lend the design a beautiful depth.Woven with wool over wool, this kilim is distinguished by its fine, even, and precise workmanship. The outlines of the motifs are meticulously executed, and each figure stands out clearly against its background. This precision is also evident to the touch, in the quality of the wool and the firmness of the weave.In the central field, a series of motifs evoking scorpions forms a vertical axis.

Associated with a protective function, this motif gives the piece a distinctive presence. On either side, two wide borders feature star-shaped forms framed by ram's horns, whose repetition sets the rhythm for the entire design.Often hung on the walls of tents, kilims of this type served both as decoration and as partitions to separate living spaces. This use likely explains, in part, the excellent condition of this piece.Mut Kilim, Southeastern AnatoliaWool on woolCirca 1930Plant-based dyesPerfect condition150 × 104 cmChoosing an antique rug or textile is often a matter of serendipity.
