Description

A pair of solid sterling silver sugar shell serving spoons assayed in London, 1913, by the silversmith partnership of George Jackson and David Fullerton trading as Josiah Williams and Company. Each spoon measures 19 centimeters in total length, and the combined weight of the two-piece set is approximately 88 grams. The wide bowls are formed into an embossed, five-lobed scallop shell design featuring defined interior ribbing. The flat handles are styled with an open curvilinear silhouette along the borders, leading into an unengraved central reserve free of personalized initials or monograms. The reverse side of the handle stems displays a stamped BCM mark alongside a row of four clear British hallmarks, which include the maker stamp, the London leopard head town mark, the lion passant
