Description

Magnificent battle painting on copper attributed to Marzio di Colantonio Ganassini (active in Viterbo, died around 1621), depicting a dynamic and crowded equestrian combat scene between cavalry and infantry, with finely detailed figures in the foreground and a broad landscape in the background featuring a fortified city and distant mountains, an excellent example of the pictorial genre known as "battle paintings", highly popular between the 16th and 18th centuries, particularly within the Italo-Flemish and Dutch traditions of the 17th century; the attribution has been confirmed by Professor Giancarlo Sestieri, a renowned art historian and leading expert in Italian battle painting, who has also authenticated a comparable work by the artist, an Equestrian Battle on copper, thereby confirming the stylistic
