Description

This painting depicts a spectacular view of the Verdon Gorge, characterized by its steep cliffs and turquoise waters. The composition is structured by a play of rocky masses framing the river, creating a marked sense of depth. The brushstrokes are thick and expressive, worked with a palette knife in places, giving relief and movement to the paint. The palette, dominated by mineral, green, and bluish tones, sensitively captures the light and ruggedness of the Provençal landscape. The work is rooted in the tradition of 20th-century French landscape painting, with a post-Impressionist approach that prioritizes texture, the vibrancy of color, and a sensitive interpretation of the subject rather than a strictly realistic rendering. François Marius Baron was born in Saint-Gervais-d'Auvergne, studied at
