Description

Émile Gallé Vase - Oak Leaves and Acorns DesignAn elegant multilayered glass vase signed by Émile Gallé, featuring a low, bulbous shape with a wide circular opening and a straight neck. It is distinguished by a superb naturalistic design of oak branches, leaves, and acorns, finely engraved in relief. The reddish-brown and wine-red tones of the design contrast harmoniously with the soft green background, which features luminous and slightly mottled shades.The engraving work particularly highlights the veins of the leaves as well as the contours of the acorns, creating a subtle interplay of relief and depth. The botanical composition elegantly envelops the body of the vase and emphasizes the roundness of its silhouette.Émile Gallé (1846-1904), a leading figure of Art

Nouveau and founder of the École de Nancy, drew much of his inspiration from observing nature. The oak holds a special place in his artistic repertoire. A symbol of strength, longevity, and rebirth, it is a recurring motif in his glass creations. In particular, the artist exploits the contrasts between the different layers of glass to give the foliage and fruit a truly sculptural quality.This vase thus attests to the richness of Gallé's naturalistic vocabulary and his remarkable mastery of multilayer glass techniques.
