Description

Oil painting, French in the second half of 1800.

The artist's desire to make the majesty of the vegetation, emerges in comparison with the size of the man and the dog that climb the stream.

The color is laid at times bodied as if to get out of the painting.

A window on nature that transmits peace and tranquility.

Signature and date, partial, in the lower right corner.

In the first canvas with restorations passed to consolidate the edges and some drilling.
