Description

A large, globular, cobalt-blue glazed ceramic vase featuring a dragon in high relief. Origin: China (Qing Dynasty style; 20th century). Glazed stoneware with a lustrous finish, complete with a wooden base. The vase has a globular form with a generous body, resting on a molded, circular dark-wood stand. The shoulder and the narrow, flared neck are adorned with a dramatic dragon sculpted in high relief; its open maw faces forward, encircling a sacred pearl. The piece exhibits a striking chromatic contrast between the deep, brilliant cobalt blue of the body and the creamy, pearl-gray glaze covering the dragon and the neck. Where the two glazes meet, the lighter glaze forms thick, irregular drips with bluish and lavender undertones, creating a highly dynamic, tactile effect.This piece belongs to the tradition of East Asian decorative ceramics, drawing inspiration from the 19th and early 20th centuries. The iconography--a dragon in high relief chasing a flaming pearl around the neck--is a classic motif found in Chinese porcelain and stoneware, particularly from the Qing Dynasty, as well as in Japanese ceramics from the Meiji era.
