Description

An Art Deco wall mirror from Belgium, made around 1920. In the years after the First World War, mirror makers left the heavy carved frames of the past behind and looked for clean, geometric shapes. The round mirror resting in a half-moon cradle became one of the most recognisable designs of the period.The round glass has a faceted edge along its upper half, cut in small scallops that catch the light like a row of tiny prisms. The lower half rests in a crescent-shaped frame with a warm copper-coloured finish, which rises in two stepped ends on either side. At the bottom, a dark curved wooden block underlines the shape and gives the mirror a strong graphic accent.The frame is made of wood and plaster with a copper-coloured finish, and the back is closed with a wooden panel. The mirror hangs on a twisted rope, which adds a relaxed, informal touch to the strict geometry of the design.A characterful mirror for a hallway, above a console or a chest of drawers, in a bedroom or a bathroom. It fits beautifully in an Art Deco or mid-century interior, and brings warmth and a sculptural touch to a modern or Scandinavian setting.Condition: Small dark spots along the edge of the glass, light wear to the frame.
