Description

This bronze sculpture depicts Vajrasattva (Sanskrit: Vajrasattva), one of the most important deities in Tibetan Buddhism (Vajrayana), who embodies purity, enlightenment, and the indestructible, diamond-like nature of the mind. The figure is seated in the lotus position (padmasana / vajrasana) on a base shaped like a row of lotus petals. The right hand, raised to chest level, holds the vajra (dorje--a ritual scepter or thunderbolt symbolizing method and compassion). The left hand, resting on the knees in a meditative gesture (dhyana mudra), holds a ritual bell (ghanta--a symbol of wisdom). His serene, slightly smiling face, with elongated brow ridges and half-closed eyelids, is crowned with an openwork crown featuring pointed elements and adorned with wide, wavy ribbons on the sides,
