Description

This rare small pendulum table in leather and brass, French work from the 1950s in the manner of Jacques Adnet, fully illustrates the refined style that distinguishes post-war Parisian workshops. The warm hand-stitched leather dialogues with the polished brass details in a grammar that is both functional and precious.Jacques Adnet (1900-1984), a major figure of French decoration, popularised from the 1940s onwards the combination of hand-stitched leather and brass in art furniture. He made it an inimitable stylistic signature, where each piece -- table, desk, lamp or chair -- becomes a precious object through the quality of execution and the nobility of materials. This pendulum table fits fully within this tradition, whose codes it adopts with finesse.With compact dimensions (Width:
