Description

Pupil of Fernand Leger before the war, this one advises to Jacques Germain to go to study at Bauhaus because it presents a beautiful mastery from its beginnings. He is a student of Kandinsky and Joseph Albers. The war makes him return to Paris. As soon as he was liberated, he stayed in the largest galleries until his death in 2001. His abstractions are sought after by his work on the void and the imbalance that it induces in the construction of the painting. This beautiful ink is one of his most successful.
