Marois (1802-1870) Son of General Jean Le Marois, he enters the diplomatic career as secretary of embassy. He was elected deputy for the Channel for the district of Valognes in 1834. In 1840, he bought the castle Rosny-sur-Seine (former property of the Duchess of Berry) saving the building from total destruction. In 1849 he was elected to the Legislative Assembly, where he sat with the majority and supported Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. After the coup d'état of Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, he was appointed senator in 1852, where he supported the restoration of the Empire. Heir to an immense fortune, he collected both ancient and modern painting. Before 1863, he decided to abandon his old hotel in the Rue Blanche to settle in the Champs-Élysées district in a hotel he had built by the architect Henri Parent avenue d'Antin (today avenue Franklin D. Roosevelt). His son, Jean Polydore, was also a member of the Manche. - Louis Hector de Galard from Brassac de Béarn (1802-1871) married to Coralie Constance Eléonore Le Marois (1805-1828) - Josephine de Galard de Brassac de Bearn (1825-1860) married June 18, 1845 with Albert de Broglie, prince de Broglie (1821-1901) son of Prince Leonce Achille Charles Victor de Broglie (1785-1870) and Ida Gustavine Albertine de Staël-Holstein (1797-1838) daughter of the famous Madame de Staël. - Duke Louis Amedee Victor de Broglie (1846-1906) married in 1871 with Pauline de La Forest of Armaillé (1851-1928) - Louis Victor Raymond Pierre de Broglie (1892-1987) Physicist, Academy of Sciences, French Academy, Price Nobel de Physique in 1929.
