Description

Circle of George Romney (1734 - 1802) "An Actress" A charming portrait of a stylish young woman holding a mask in the style of George Romney. The mask probably indicates that it is an actress. The painting dates to the late 18th early 19th century and is beautifully presented in a carved frame. The frame was possibly part of the interior of a paneled room, where the painting may have been inset in the panelling. Romney was the most fashionable artist of his day, painting many society figures. Emma Hamilton, mistress of Lord Nelson. Another popular sitter was his friend and the playwright Richard Cumberland, whose portrait he painted on several occasions. Condition The painting has been made and replaced by a replacement cross stretcher. There are small areas of retouching and rubbing
