Description

Macchad rug decorated with ancient Khorassan carpet, native to the Khorassan region in Iran, Persia.

These Persian carpets, so called, also bear the name of Macchad because they are more recent than the Khorassan whose manufacture is considered to be much older.

These rugs with seedlings of flowers called herati motif are of the most beautiful effect and of a very good quality of hand knotted wool.

This repeated motif covers the entire field with a dominance of red supported by a clear blue highlighting the flower decoration.

The famous Herati motif is found in many Persian pieces which originated in this region and is the main motif of khorassan.

These carpets have kept the format called
