Description

Beautiful and large garden statue in reconstituted stone, mid-twentieth time, representing a naked man in the style of ancient statues and recalling the representations of Apollo. This statue has just emerged from the large park in which it had been for many, many years, so it has been beautifully weathered by the time and the seasons which have gradually left their mark: lichen on the base and on the back of the character, greyness giving a very harmonious light and shadow effect, small material irregularities etc ... The whole is in good used condition, some very small chips without impact are to be noted (back of the knee in particular, see last photo). This statue can obviously be used in interior decoration.
