Durand-Brager made many trips to Europe, Algeria, along the Atlantic coasts of the Africa before entering Eugène Isabey's studio. In 1840, he was part of the expedition responsible for bringing back Napoleon's ashes. Returned to France, he painted many pictures of naval battles (fight of the frigate Niemen against the frigates Aréthusa and Amethyst 1843), some of which were ordered by the French government (Bombardment of Mogador, naval combat in front of the Moroccan coast 1845). During the Crimean War (1853-1855), he attended the siege of Sébastopol, then he participated in an expedition to the Black Sea and at the end of the
