Description

This puppet from Myanmar is made up of different parts: head, neck, body, arms, legs and feet. The puppet moves thanks to wires attached to an H-shaped control. A particularity of these puppets is that they have sexual organs hidden under their clothes. The pieces making up the puppet are made of wood; the head, hands and feet are carved and painted. The puppet is dressed in traditional clothes. This puppet was golden in color but it faded over time and gave way to an ocher color. The gold is however still clearly visible on his headdress and his hands. The feet are cut in the shape of shoes. The headdress and the shoes are decorated with pearls. Her outfit is decorated with pearls, sequins and golden threads creating floral patterns. One of the feet of the puppet is broken but remains attached to it by one
