He has participated in various national and international exhibitions, also winning several awards. He has produced numerous macrosculptures installed in different parts of the world. The sculptor's favorite material for the realization of his abstract sculptures, like the one in question, is iron to which he gives a flexible rhythm through the cracks and tears of the material. The forms assumed by the iron develop rhythmically in space. This sculpture is made up of two parts. The base and the upper part which turns on itself. The sculpture features an elegant silver finish. The sculpture is signed "Simon Benetton 1992" as shown in the photos. The work measures: 195 cm
