Description

Insatiable for knowledge, no border stops me as I love to tell the beautiful story here: In ancient times the caravans, in Tibet or in Nepal, when they left one monastery to join another never left without a shaman in the troop. The harsh climatic conditions, the long exhausting walks sometimes came to meet the life of a guide. In the event of a death, the shaman made a human effigy in a tinder mushroom, then they submitted by chanting to the "Chod" ritual. A word of explanation is in order: since the carnal envelope is only the vehicle of our thoughts; he is happy to imagine that when this body is no longer functioning, the spirit of the deceased can be divulged universally since the body will be offered and will be eaten by the birds. their flight will end the prayers. During this ritual the shaman plants one of the poles of this Vajra in the ground, the other side pointing towards the firmament, he grasps the other two sides and will then be the catalyst of the telluric and celestial forces which will pass through him: his words will be "gospels". I find this picture painted in a few words full of joy. This object was brought back to Europe a long time ago, I like this object, it is "charged".
