Description

A group of gentlemen sitting at a table in a salon, greedily eating a roast, on the left an elderly woman asking for an alms. An expressive narrative genre scene, which combines a historical motif with a critical undertone. Characteristic genre painting by Gaisser, who liked to depict cheerful table parties of the 17th/18th century. Jakob Emanuel Gaisser (1825 - 1899) was a German genre painter. He is the father of Max Gaisser. Jakob Emanuel Gaisser received his first painting lessons from his father, a drawing teacher, went on to study at the Augsburg College with Johann Wilhelm Rudolf Geyer (1807-1875) and then at the Munich Academy of Fine Arts with Clemens von Zimmermann (1788-1869) and Julius Schnorr von Carolsfeld (1794-1872). Gaisser worked as a teacher at the Feiertags-Fortbildungsschule in Augsburg. In 1863, he came to Munich to devote himself fully to painting. Jakob Emanuel Gaisser created many genre paintings in the style of 17th and 18th century Dutch painting. Many of his works appeared as postcards and in illustrated magazines. His son, Max Gaisser (1857-1922), also became a genre painter.
