Description

Large root wood sculpture representing the God of Longevity Shou Lao * or Shou Xing, standing draped in his coat, holding the peach of longevity, from China, from the early 20th century. This sculpture is in good condition. Old label below. A note: some tiny cracks of time in the wood, slight wear of time, see photos. We put other similar sculptures for sale on this site. * Shouxing or Shou-Hsing "Star of Longevity", is represented as a man with a beard and white eyebrows, with advanced baldness and holding a gnarled stick, symbol of the immortals. He became famous as Shou Lao, the god of longevity and the "Old Man of the South Pole". It is he who decides the date of death of each person, which he puts in writing. The digits of this date cannot be changed, but they can sometimes be interchanged. He is part of
