Description

This regional piece of furniture, entirely in solid walnut, has a large flap made up of a single panel with perfect jointing and a mitred frame. It is equipped with a functional original lock with its key and bronze entry. Open, it rests on two sliding supports with brass buttons. The writing space is darkened with black leather with a gilt vignette and central pattern. The interior, said to be stepped, offers, on each side, three shaped drawers and, in the center, a door forming a tabernacle with a shelf. Special feature of this piece of furniture: its niche, which conceals two clasps. This system makes it possible to lock the two small drawers on the front alternately. Under these opens a large drawer with an original lock in working order. All three are recessed, molded, and fitted with drooping bronze handles. The
