2 700 EUR

Period : 20th century

Condition : Usures d'usage

Description

Very rare reliquary box of the Téké ethnic group of CONGO with its fetish as a lid. The Téké are a Bantu people located in the Congo and a little bit in Gabon According to the founding myths, they would descend from Nguunu, ancestor of most of the populations of southern Congo. Successors of the pygmies in the occupation of Congo-Brazzaville, they are founders of the great Téké kingdom, rival of the Kongo kingdom. This type of box is more often encountered among their Fang neighbors. Our box is made of bark enclosed by ropes, lianas in which wooden nails have been inserted The reliquary surmounting the lid and made of semi-hard wood Its scarified face surmounted by a hat, typical of the Téké Ropes hold pieces of wood encircling its belly or is carved a reliquary cavity Remains of feathers of
