Description

With its raised edges and marked angles, this adorable little cabaret table from the Louis XV period bears witness to the spread of this style in the French kingdom. While the aristocracy and the upper middle class chose the finest mahogany for their furniture, the lesser nobility and more modest fortunes preferred local woods such as walnut. With its small drawer and its lovely baluster legs, this small cabaret table is a discreet but charming piece of furniture, of excellent quality and essential in any interior, classic or modern. Very good condition.
