Description

Large bronze with brown patina signed Edouard Drouot (1859-1945). This French sculptor is known for his sculptures of mythical scenes which are characterized by a sense of movement and an impressive expressive touch. "Allegory of Poetry" is a work inspired by the sculptures of antiquity featuring a naked man dressed in animal skin and Spartans. A scarf imprisons her curly hair, highlighting her serious face whose lowered eyes are fixed on a large tablet adorned with a laurel wreath. In his right hand he holds a stylus. His raised arm seems to gain momentum. His posture is haughty and his muscular body. This important bronze by Edouard Drouot will delight you with its charisma and beautiful patina.
