Description

This Delft earthenware vase, with a smooth and shiny white background, with blue patterns in different tones ranging from light to dark, is characterized by its fleshy ribbed body. It is surmounted by a Fao dog lid, covered with flowers, surrounded by wavy friezes. The top of the body, squared and with natural motifs, leads to an abundant plant decoration, made up of flowers, fruits and dragonflies, which frames two scenes in which we see pagodas, a watercourse and birds on the horizon. . It ends on a slightly flared foot with the same motifs as the top of the body. Delft earthenware, originating from Dutch factories since the 17th century, is characterized by its enamelling and the finesse of its decorations; qualities that this luminous vase can claim.
