Born in 1891, a dear friend of the writer Colette and the painter Jean-Gabriel Domergue, he mainly distinguished himself in the production of watercolors, drawings, as well as engraving. He assiduously evoked the Montmartre environment over several decades. He was then nicknamed the Grand Dig.
He drew his inspiration from feminine beauty to paint mainly portraits and nudes. Moreover, he established himself as a book illustrator and theater designer. He will then take an interest in landscapes, supported by his friend André Dunoyer de Segonzac. In addition to his work as
