Description

Remarkable Boulle desk from the Napoleon III period (mid-19th century), exemplifying the luxury and craftsmanship characteristic of this era. This exquisite piece is distinguished by its intricate marquetry and the sophisticated use of contrasting materials, both of which reflect the exceptional skill and artistry of the period.

Materials

The desk is constructed from a solid ebony frame, veneered with finely crafted brass. The brass is meticulously shaped into elaborate floral scrolls and geometric patterns, demonstrating the precision and technical expertise of the artisan. This marquetry technique, known as "Boulle marquetry," is named after the esteemed French cabinetmaker André-Charles Boulle, who perfected it in the 17th century. The juxtaposition of dark ebony and gleaming brass creates a striking contrast, imbuing the desk with a sense of grandeur and opulence.

Decoration

The desk features a variety of decorative elements, each enhancing the overall aesthetic:

Intricate floral marquetry on the facade and top, highlighting the skillful craftsmanship and attention to detail.

Gilt bronze mounts applied to the legs, keyholes, and hardware, further elevating the desk's luxurious appeal.

A fine leather writing surface, combining practicality with an elegant, sophisticated finish.

This Boulle desk stands as a testament to the high level of craftsmanship and design that defines the Napoleon III style. Its refined materials, expert construction, and timeless beauty make it a highly valuable piece for any distinguished collector or connoisseur of fine furniture.
