Description

Oil on canvas from the 17th century. Dimensions with frame: 68 x 88 cm "Holland, this country where the sea is everywhere, what more striking landscapes than this intense port activity cradled in the northern light. It is quite natural for painters to direct their gaze towards the coast, the economic and social heart of a country which has dearly acquired its freedom and is proud of its economic success. The Dutch, in the long war of liberation which opposed them to the kingdom of Spain, also won several naval victories which are exalted in the painting and contribute greatly to the dissemination of the navies. Van de Velde manifests great qualities of observation which apply as much to the landscape as to the scenes of life described in his paintings and to the representations he draws of ships.
