Description

Fine earthenware coffee pot attributed to Douai, 18th century. A hollow mark that is difficult to read: interlaced foliage? The classic decor of this coffee maker is generous, bursting with colors especially as they are fixed forever, not undergoing the patina of time. The very typical handle of this model is in perfect condition, which is rare, but the spout has been glued, a small defect that has not been restored. The body of the coffee maker is in good condition even if one can report small chips on the base, the spout and the grip button.
