know how to raise with a vital contrast.

Around the 1900s, as an occasional neighbour, Cabié went to the small town of Saint Circq du Bugue, where he produced many views of the church and the houses leaning against the hill. Very often sunny landscapes concentrating on a corner of a valley or opening onto the Vézère valley and the wooded hills on the opposite bank. This village located a few kilometers from Les Eyzies conceals many sympathetic points of view that Louis Cabié knew how to put on his canvases and his papers.

Our landscape is made on the side of the village, towards Les Eyzies, the Vézère being at the bottom of the composition, at the foot of the hills. This misty valley of a very large format, the most imposing currently known to Cabié, is a piece of poetry in itself. This light-toned oil is a little Périgord jewel made at the end of autumn 1918.
