Description

An interesting architectural vestige of the 19th century, probably coming from the top of the lintel of a window or a door, representing a woman's face erased in the manner of the mascarons of the architectural facades, on which one encountered multiple faces of this type adorning the arches.

this vestige is made of old cement which has crumbled over time.

the fact remains that what remains of it offers the possibility of a very interesting antique decor.
a beautiful interior or even exterior decoration in the style of ancient ruins.

dimensions:

32 cm high by 27 cm wide and 15 cm deep.
