representing dancers and mythological figures in the Art Deco style. During the interwar period, he exhibited several times at the Salon of the Society of French Artists in Paris. He collaborates with the Art Publisher Arthur Goldscheider. At the International Exhibition of Modern Decorative and Industrial Arts of 1925, his works are presented both on the stand of Goldscheider as well as on that of Edmond Etling (another founder who also edited his bronzes) At the Universal Exhibition in Paris in 1937, he presented sculptures made by the Etling foundries, Le Neveux by Jules Lehmann and by M. Ollier. At that time he also created everyday objects in the art deco style, such as electric lamps, ashtrays, incense burners.... In 1939, he published advertisements for drawing lessons given at 20 rue Ernest Cresson in Paris.
