Description

A rare subject. Against an urban background, a crowd in Old Regime clothes gathered around a violinist - a bit grotesque with his big glasses - looking intensely at him; a woman on the left even points her finger at him. Rare illustration of the song "la Bourbonnaise", the nickname given to Jeanne du Barry, the last favorite of the King of France Louis XV by his detractors, the pamphleteers and then by the revolutionaries. Period XIXth century. Diameter: 8.5 cm Height: 2.3 cm Good condition. In its own juice, never touched, beautiful patina of time. In very good condition considering its age and material! Many other objects to discover in my stand at the antique fairs in which I participate. Follow my gallery to be informed of new products and to know the dates of the next Salons ... Any
