Description

Travel chest in lacquered and painted wood, iron fittings and lock. Japanese work from the Momoyama period, end of the 16th century. The exterior is lacquered in black with gold and colour. A few typical motifs date it with certainty around 1580 more or less 20 years. Very rare specimen, few similar models exist. The key lock is one of the very first executed in Japan, it was the Portuguese who brought the technique when they landed around 1550. The decoration on the top has completely disappeared and only a few remain places on the door. On the other hand both sides and the back are in good condition. The interior is perfectly preserved and the colors have kept their freshness allowing an excellent observation of the very first Japanese lacquers (Namban) intended for export. In a catalog from
