Description

This 'Moulin Rouge' poster was created by René Péan in 1900. René Péan (1875-1940) was a French painter, draftsman and illustrator known for his advertisements, particularly his theater and entertainment posters. He was active during the Belle Époque, a period of peace, prosperity and artistic innovation in France. This poster was designed to promote the "New Roller Coaster" at the famous Parisian nightclub, the Moulin Rouge.

The Moulin Rouge was created in 1889 by Charles Zidler and Joseph Oller and quickly became the symbol of the bohemian and festive spirit of Paris at that time. In this poster, René Péan captured the excitement and thrill of the new roller coaster attraction, which was one of the main attractions at the Moulin Rouge at that time. The roller coaster in the poster was intended to symbolize not only the entertainment and fun of the Moulin Rouge, but also the cultural exchange and influence that took place during the Belle Époque. The vibrant colors, dynamic composition and sense of movement of the poster perfectly capture the energy and spirit of the Moulin Rouge and its roller coaster ride.

Today, Péan's "Moulin Rouge" poster is considered a classic example of Belle Époque advertising art and is highly sought after by collectors and enthusiasts. The creation of the Moulin Rouge poster is said to have been influenced by the artistic movements of the time, such as Art Nouveau.
