Description

Super small vases by Muller frères from the school of Nancy, art deco period. After the war of 14-18, the Muller company became prosperous and the factory employed up to three hundred people9. The production then evolved towards the Art Deco style, creating in the 1920s many ceiling lights in marmoreal glass (glass of several colors, the pigments being incorporated) or parts in molded glass, the mounts being in brass, bronze or iron. wrought.Toilet fittings, sprays and perfume bottles were also made in large numbers at this time10. In parallel with this industrial production, artistic glassware is still produced11. Following the Great Depression, the Muller company went bankrupt in 1933 and the Croismare factory, which had been bought by Daum, closed at the end of 1934.
