Description

Very nice portrait representing a woman. Joseph Constant Brochart was a French painter active in the 19th century. He was born in Paris in 1816 and began his artistic career studying under the direction of Léon Cogniet. He first exhibited at the Paris Salon in 1835, and won several medals for his work throughout his career. Brochart was known for his genre paintings, which often depicted scenes from daily life or intimate moments from family life. He also created portraits and landscapes, as well as religious paintings. His style was influenced by neoclassical and romantic painting of his time, and he often used a soft, subtle color palette. Brochart was very active in the Parisian art scene of his time, and was an influential member of the Société des Artistes Français. He was also a
