Description

Between 2003 and 2007, a profound transformation took place in the painting of Joan-Carles Roca Sans.
After going through dramatic personal experiences, the search for light becomes an obsession.

By realizing that the line of the drawing makes it possible to mark the difference between a figure and the background without changing color, Roca Sans gives a new reading to figurative painting. Managing to represent space through the balance of colors and temperatures, he claims a subjective and non-photographic framework for artistic creation and explores the possibilities of light to find his own spiritual space.
