Grohmann's works are known for their unique style, which featured bold colors and visible brushstrokes. He was heavily influenced by the Impressionist and Post-Impressionist movements and often used their techniques to create his distinctive style.

This particular painting from 1903, depicting a German landscape with a blooming bush in the foreground, a shimmering stream with reflections, and a hill with a windmill in the background, showcases Grohmann's exceptional skill as a painter. The painting captures the essence of an autumn day with its warm colors and visible brushstrokes.
