crosspiece is finely cut and slightly molded. The upper part is composed of two doors with worked frames. The panels, symmetrical, come from the same log. These openings are provided with an original lock with key and flame entry. The reverse of these doors is molded and with flowerbeds, which, for information, made it possible to expose the crockery to the knowledge and the sight of all. The interior is lined with adjustable oak shelves since they are placed on hollowed notches. The whole is crowned with a cornice, in a policeman's hat, molded with scrolls. The high arched crosspiece is slightly convex. The framed sides are also molded. The drawer interiors and the back are in oak. Exceptional in terms of its authenticity, its size (namely its height of 2.35 m for this type of furniture) and its various functions, this scriban chest of drawers from the port of Nantes has not suffered from the ravages of time over the past two hundred years.
