campaigns: from the one for Gallo rice to the Fiat 127, to the posters for the Gruppo Finanziario Tessile. In the 1980's he became a painter, and devoted to an openly and decidedly homoerotic art, between the new Dadaism and pop art, between Matisse and Piero Manzoni, always in the wake of the "joie de vivre" and through reinterpretations of the Dionysian and Olympic themes of classical art, such as the martyrdom of San Sebastiano, Silombria was also among the animators of the F. U. O. R. I., the movement for gay rights created by Angelo Pezzana, and of the Turin Radical Party, also linking his name to the birth of the first homosexual cinema review: "From Sodom to Hollywood".

Always an active gay militant, Silombria had been the 'creative mind' of the first Italian homosexual association, the Fuori!, for which he had created the graphics and to which he had donated paintings and drawings (the famous gender Aphrodite in Warhol-Hopper style which camped for years in the hall of the Sandro Penna Foundation).
