Description

This Day of celebration is characteristic of the work of the painter Joan-Carles Roca Sans from the 2000s.
In search of light, he treats it with a particular force that reinforces the line used as a separating element. By realizing how much it makes it possible to mark the difference between a figure and the background without changing color, Roca Sans gives a new reading to figuration.
Managing to represent space through the balance of colors and temperatures, he claims a subjective framework for artistic creation and explores the possibilities of light to find his own spiritual space.
