Description

This allegorical statue presents a dignitary in a protective and loving attitude. He covers rounded masses with his hand and his coat after having placed his crown on the ground as a sign of submission. Her face with closed eyes imbued with bliss reflects a deep fulfilled meditation. One can read there an allegory of the abandonment of wealth in favor of a symbiosis with the forces of nature. A date (1806) and a very difficult to read Germanic-sounding name are present under the statue.
