his portraits, still lifes, interiors, depictions of fishermen and people in their surroundings.

He studied first at the Academy of Ypres, then at Roeselare and finally at the Academy of Antwerp.

In 1885, he joined "Als ik Kan" (If I can), an Antwerp association of plastic artists who work in a traditional way.

He participated in the Universal Exhibition of 1910 in Brussels.

At the start of the First World War, in 1914, he emigrated to Great Britain, where he became known as a portrait painter. He remained in Italy in 1917.

He received several awards, including an honorable mention at the Universal Exhibition in Paris in 1889, the silver medal in Bordeaux in 1895 and the silver medal in Brussels in 1910. He sought his subjects mainly in poor neighborhoods. Many of his paintings deal with the life of the fishermen of Nieuwpoort.

His works can be found in museums in Antwerp, Kortrijk and in the National Fisheries Museum in Oostduinkerke.
