recognized orientalist ceramist and many times medalist, creator of the magnificent Japanese decor of the thermal establishment of Bourbon-l'Archambault, defender of polychrome architecture, researcher and art historian, Léon Parvillée (1830-1885) was an "eclectic" artist in every sense of the word. His passion for ceramics, born of his work as an ornamentalist and then as an architect, constantly pushed him to take his technical or aesthetic research from object to the building or from the building to the object. Drawing from all fields and all references, the decorations and enamels he composes create a permanent dialogue between architecture and the decorative arts."
